ON LEAVE IN PARIS

A Sunday the cafes along the Grand Boulevard will be thronged with people drinking and watching the procession move by. The people seem to be for the most part bearing up well under the strain they have been under for the last few years and it is very seldom that you see anything but a smile on their faces. Of course life is not quite as bright as before the war but they surely show a brave face, wonder if the States could do as well? On Sunday we visited the grand church of Notre Dame which is a truly wonderful building with all its statues, carvings and the fine art glass windows which light it up with a soft light which makes one wonder where it comes from. The front at the present time is protected to some extent with sand bags but of course the beauty is there nevertheless. The music is fine and the organ seems to make the entire church quiver. As the custom in these large churches there are many small alters which seem to be small churches in themselves. Only wish mother might see this for she could not help but enjoy it. Of course we visited the Invalides which contains the tomb of the Mighty Napoleon, here also are many relics of the present war and also the wars which were many years before. The parks and drives of the city are great and for a very small sum one can go most any place. Of course we wish with the subway system which we soon did as it is very easy to go any place on it, on the whole we rather "did" the place while there and I think it surely a swell place to spend one's leave (and money) ha, ha.

Well Sis I guess I have written enough for the present and so hoping you are all well and happy I will close.

Your loving brother, JOE.
